Today, educating young people in the spirit of spiritual, moral and military patriotism, instilling and forming in their minds feelings of love for the Motherland, a responsible attitude to labor, and respect for military service is one of the main issues of any educational process [1]. The reason is that international relations are currently becoming more complicated and changing dramatically, and attempts to solve problems through the use of force are becoming more and more common. Undoubtedly, if we think based on the peace in our country and the relatively stable military-political situation in our region, it seems that there is no risk of armed conflicts. However, the words of our great ancestor, thinker Ahmad Donish, who said, "The absence of the threat of war today does not mean that it will not happen tomorrow," still retain their meaning and content [3]. With this in mind, the highest goal of every educator is to preserve small details of patriotism in every moment of the information or information provided, even in every action taken. Because it is no exaggeration to say that the constant vigilance in the process of education and upbringing, the instillation of a sense of patriotism, and any efforts aimed at the development and growth of this feeling in the minds of young people, have proven to have positive results in the future. In this regard, it seems that there is no way to not mention the famous phrase of our great writer Abdullah Qodiriy, "It is good to return to the past and do business." Because, as everyone knows, when we turn to the pages of our many millennia of history, such events are recorded in it that sometimes fill a person with pride, and sometimes with sadness. When you walk through the dark streets of the past, you will often come across brave people who, as if carrying a torch, put goodness in their hearts and stood up against the invaders and the ignorant. They are people who know and understand the concepts of homeland, people and their freedom. At the same time, they are people who are able to demonstrate patriotism in their actions. The reason is that such people are considered examples of mature, broad-minded, perfect individuals of their time. At the same time, it is worth noting that the feeling of patriotism shines through their faces in the very actions and thoughts of such people. We can not only feel this, but also witness it, and this gives us a sense of pride, we even feel proud. Because the concept of patriotism expresses the love and loyalty of these people to their homeland, to the place where they live. Patriotism is a universal human feeling that is common to any person, people, nation, and has been cultivated for centuries, and is considered one of the spiritual values. The concept is clearly manifested in pride in the past and present of the homeland and in protecting its interests [1, 2].

Today, educating young people in the spirit of spiritual, moral and military patriotism, instilling and forming in their minds feelings of love for the Motherland, a responsible attitude to labor and respect for military service is one of the main issues of any educational process [1]. However, the words of our great ancestor, thinker Ahmad Donish, who said, “The absence of the threat of war today does not mean that it will not happen tomorrow,” always retain their meaning and content [3].

Keeping this in mind, the highest goal of every educator is to preserve the smallest details of patriotism in every moment of the information or information being provided, and even in every action being taken, or to be in a tone that is inspired by patriotic feelings. Because it is no exaggeration to say that the constant vigilance instilling a sense of patriotism in the educational process, and any efforts aimed at the development and growth of this feeling in the minds of young people, have proven to have positive results in the future. In this regard, it seems that there is no way to not mention the famous phrase of our great writer Abdulla Qodiriy: “It is good to return to the past and do work.” Because, as everyone knows, when we turn to the pages of our many millennia of history, there are such events recorded in it that, reading them, one is sometimes filled with pride, and sometimes with sadness. When you walk through the dark streets of the past, you often come across brave people who, as if carrying a torch, stood up to the invaders and the ignorant, with goodness in their hearts. We can not only feel this, but also witness it, and it gives us a sense of pride, we even feel proud. Because the concept of Patriotism expresses the love and loyalty of these people to their homeland, to the place where they live. Patriotism is a universal human feeling that is common to any person, people, nations, and has been cultivated for centuries, and is considered one of the spiritual values. The concept is clearly manifested in being proud of the past and present of the homeland, in protecting its interests [1, 2].

After all, it is not for nothing that our wise people say that “Loving the homeland is a matter of faith.” Because wherever a person is born, this place is considered a precious homeland for him.

Indeed, the wise say: “A person’s loyalty is known by his sorrow for his homeland, his longing for his brothers, and his regret for the wasted moments of his life.” Therefore, a person’s loyalty and dedication to his people motivates him to protect his homeland, to make it strong and powerful in all respects, and his efforts for the peace and prosperity of his people themselves demonstrate patriotism [6]. Therefore, educational methodologies and methods for forming a sense of patriotism in young people determine the main achievement of pedagogical personnel. Because the retention of pedagogical lectures or seminars in the minds of young people or the expression of some event is related to its significance in our lives. If this information is conveyed to young people in every discipline in a way that is consistent with history and its place in our lives today, as well as the goals and tasks of humanity in society, the result will be a broadening of the worldview of young people in any field of education. We should not forget that we are the descendants of great ancestors [7].

Patriotism, on the other hand, is a characteristic of every person in his daily life, in the workplace, in the family, in the fulfillment of his duties and responsibilities, as well as in the goals set in life, and is refined over the years. As a result, such individuals radiate only light, energy, knowledge and enlightenment. At this point, it is worth saying that there are many such patriotic scholars in our country.

In this regard, the work of our first president, “High Spirituality, Invincible Power,” also contains a lot of information about our ancestors and their contributions to their homeland [2]. For example, the courage of Amir Temur, Jaloliddin Manguberdi and other great patriotic commanders are particularly mentioned. Therefore, even though we live in the age of technology, our glorious history is of great importance in educating the younger generation, especially in military education, in the spirit of patriotism, imbued with universal human values, in raising perfect individuals. Because as you read, every event and piece of information passes through our minds and fascinates us, and like a mirror, it affects our thoughts and ideas. For example, when we contemplate our great grandfather Amir Temur, we witness that throughout his life he promoted the signs of patriotism, universal ideas such as justice, equality, honesty, enlightenment, and humanity, and was able to make them principles for himself. It is also noteworthy that Amir Temur was extremely careful about the upbringing of his generation. He paid full attention to choosing a bride for the health of his offspring and the generation. He also forbade the princes to drink various intoxicating drinks and smoke. He paid special attention to their upbringing and education. It is important to note that he was able to show the attention he paid to his family to his entire people and empire. He considered science and education to be the main weapon for the peace and prosperity of the population. Timur and the Timurids attached special importance to physical education and the mastery of military arts in the upbringing of children [4]. The targeted and targeted application of such information in the educational processes of young people increases the scope of the concepts of nobility and patriotism. Therefore, the program of our historical sources should be implemented not only in the educational process of military personnel, but also in the educational process of each young person [2]. Because the influence of our rich heritage will be more effective. It is important that such processes are encouraged by our educators to use the exemplary past of our ancestors in the current situation or situation, to study their rich history in more depth, and to pay attention to the places of exchange of additional information. In this process, any cadre should have sufficient pedagogical skills. To do this, one must be able to use innovative forms of modern education [5]. For example, by presenting information in practical exercises and interactive forms of education and repeating the ideas expressed, one can roughly calculate the part that forms the spirit of patriotism from any lesson. As a result, the level of understanding of the sense of patriotism in young people increases in each educational process, based on both science and universal ideas. By ensuring the continuity of such education for young people and putting it into practice, it becomes relatively easier to achieve the development of the spirit of patriotism in them.

It is no exaggeration that in our time, serious requirements are being imposed on the level of professionalism of modern personnel in any field. Therefore, it is important for each of the military personnel serving in the Armed Forces not only to have a deep knowledge of their profession, but also to have high intellectual potential and a broad outlook, and to act in the spirit of patriotism. Because military personnel must not only have high physical fitness, but also be distinguished by high intelligence, morality, strong will and spiritual preparation, as well as patriotic feelings.

In conclusion, it can be said that ensuring the effectiveness of the educational process and conveying patriotic ideological and scientific propaganda to young people can be achieved by delivering interesting and clear short, meaningful thoughts during lectures or when receiving some practical assignments. This requires teachers to be expressive, bright, logical, precise, prompt and coherent. Any patriotic teacher who embodies such qualities can infect this feeling in himself, like an infectious virus, in a good sense. As a result, the process of educating young people in the spirit of patriotism is being carried out step by step with high skill, and the achievement of the set goals is being confirmed by high results.
